Matt Williamson joined Natsource in the spring of 2001, focusing on the OTC NOx allowance market and the developing NOx allowance market for the SIP call region.

Prior to joining Natsource, Mr. Williamson spent a number of years working for Office of Air and Radiation at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in Washington, DC. While with OAR's Climate Protection Division, Mr. Williamson developed voluntary partnership programs with major US industries to reduce U.S. greenhouse gas emissions and enhance energy efficiency.

Following these successful initiatives, he joined the OAR's Clean Air Markets Division to pursue a collaborative effort with the Chinese State Environmental Protection Administration to investigate the potential of cap and trade systems to address Chinese problems with acid rain.

Mr. Williamson holds an M.B.A. from INSEAD in Fontainebleau, France, a Masters degree in International Affairs from Columbia University where he focused on environmental policy and an A.B. from Princeton University.
